The Count de Rabutin is gone with the Treaty to the Court of Vienna, and the Marquis du Luc to that of France. This Treaty is to be ratified within 6 Weeks, and to be executed in 4 Weeks after. 'Tis in Latin, and reported to be very little different from that of Raftad: There is a separate Article relating to the Titles which the Emperour assumes. From the Hague Courant, dated Sept. 17.

Hague, Sept. 16. The Deputies sent by the States-General to receive the King of Great-Britain on the Frontiers of this State, returned hither this Morning, and appeared in the Assembly of their High Mightynesses. Yesterday between 5 and 6 in the Evening his Majesty arrived at Utrecht, the Cannon firing, and was complimented by the States of that Province. At 8 his Majesty arrived at Woerden, the Cannon firing, and was congratulated by the Deputies of the States of Holland. His Majesty set out the 11th in the Morning from Herrenhausen, and lay that Night at Doepenau, the 12th at Ippenburg, the 13th at Quikkel, the 14th at Voorst, and last Night at Woerden. Between 8 and 9 this Morning his Majesty came from Woerden, and about 5 arrived here. In his Passage through Leiden this Afternoon, 9 Cannon were discharged 6 Times, making up 54. Shot in all, the Number of Years of his Majesty's Age. His Majesty came to the Old Court in a Coach of the Earl of Albemarle's, attended by a Detachment of our Guards: In the second Coach was the Prince; and in others which followed were the Deputies of Holland and divers Persons of Distinction.

Hague, Sept. 18. The King, with the Prince, appeared together Yesterday in a Coach in the Voorhout; on which Occasion there was a very numerous Train of Coaches, and a vast Concource of People.

Hague, Sept. 18. The King of Great-Britain arrived here last Sunday between 4 and 5 in the Afternoon: His Majesty kept his Chamber the rest of that Day, to repose himself after the Fatigue of his Journey. Yesterday Noon Deputies from the Assembly of the States-General were admitted to an Audience of the King: After which his Majesty appeared in Publick, and almost all the English who are here had the Honour to kiss his Hand. Yesterday and to Day his Majesty dined in publick; and People are so eager to crowd in to see him, that many have been hurt in the Press. 'Tis not certain yet whether his Majesty will imbark at Helvoetsluys or at Oranje-polder, but 'tis most likely it will be at the first of those Places, because since the Death of King William the Port of Oranje-polder has been so neglected that 'tis almost choaked up with Sand. The Baggage is actually sent on Board, and 'tis certain his Majesty is absolutely determined to imbark the first fair Wind. P. S. This Morning between 11 and 12 the French Ambassador had a private Audience of his Majesty.
